Insider Perspective: Summer in the Real World

September 16, 2015

By Olivia Kookoothe, ICE Participant, Alliance Data Card Services

Here we are in September, and I'm still wondering whether summer even happened? The season flew by – accelerated by the fact that this was my first summer in the real world. And it was an adjustment! For the past sixteen years of my life as a scholar, summer has meant a break from school and a break from reality. This year, summer meant...work (with a little sunshine on the side). Now, summer's over and students everywhere have returned to the classroom. All the back-to-school hoopla has me reminiscing about where I was a year ago today.

In September of 2014, I'd just finished my internship with Alliance Data. Not long after that, I received a full-time job offer from the company, which totally changed my senior year of college. While most of my classmates were hunting for jobs, I was able to relax and enjoy my final year with no adult responsibilities. By the time graduation came around, I was ready to dive into my new role at Alliance Data, which I officially started in July. As expected, beginning my career has been overwhelming at times, especially since I'm in a brand new city. However, my transition's been a little easier because of Alliance Data's Initial Career Experience \(ICE\) program.

As an ICE participant, I have the opportunity to experience two different roles in the company. I have three months to learn each role, discovering my strengths and exploring my interests along the way. Basically, I get six months to learn as much as possible about Alliance Data, while meeting as many people as I can. It's a unique chance to build my business acumen and start to establish a professional network. My first two months in ICE have been a whirlwind, in the best way.

So sure, I do miss my summer break a little – but who doesn't? I'm happy to be in the real world. I'm soaking this experience in. Every day, I'm accomplishing new tasks and overcoming new challenges (most recently – signing up for a 401K). There are a lot of good things happening at Alliance Data, and I'm thankful to be part of it all. I can't wait to see where the next year takes me!
